“I am a 6.” If you’re familiar with the language of ACEs, this simple statement speaks volumes. It says, “I endured things no child should have to endure. I witnessed things no child should have to see. As an adult, I’m more vulnerable.”

“ACEs” refers to a growing body of research conducted over the past 15 years that links several Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACEs) to a myriad of social, emotional, and cognitive impairments. Most of these traumatic experiences are related to abuse, neglect and violence. The research shows that the higher the number of ACEs you experience, the greater your risk of devastating adult outcomes, such as disease, depression, criminal behavior, substance abuse, academic and employment impediments, perpetrating or being a victim of family violence, and more.

At NW Children’s Fund, we focus on the corollary: For every ACE that we can prevent or mitigate, we are improving a child’s chances at a healthy future. The research has provided the child welfare community a clear, common language for talking about childhood trauma—a language that resonates with victims of abuse, social workers, economists, and philanthropists alike. It has sparked understanding and collaboration – and has provided a framework for building solutions. Moreover, it has given NW Children’s Fund, and the agencies we fund, clear confirmation and confidence that we’re on the right path to ending the cycle of child abuse and neglect.

The 10 Adverse Childhood Experiences

Abuse
- Emotional Abuse
- Physical Abuse
- Sexual Abuse

Neglect
- Emotional Neglect
- Physical Neglect

Household Dysfunction
- Mother Treated Violently
- Household Substance Abuse
- Household Mental Illness
- Parental Separation or Divorce
- Incarcerated Household Member

To find your ACE score, visit acestudy.org

We start out with no ACEs. Let’s keep it that way. Compared to a person with no ACEs, a person with 4 ACEs is 4x as likely to be a victim of domestic violence, 7x more likely to be an alcoholic, 10x more likely to inject street drugs, and 12x more likely to attempt suicide.
How ACEs impact a young brain

During stressful situations, the brain releases high amounts of the long-term stress hormone, cortisol. This shuts off your executive function and activates your fight-or-flight mechanism. This response is imperative protection in emergency situations.

But for a child dealing with repeated stresses and traumas, the brain calls on this response so often that it carves out new neural pathways. This significantly affects brain development, and especially impacts the prefrontal cortex, which manages self-control, impulse control, certain kinds of memory, and reasoning.

ACEs are surprisingly common

For example, in the average Washington classroom of 30:
- 6 students have no ACE
- 5 students have 1 ACE
- 6 students have 2 ACEs
- 3 students have 3 ACEs
- 7 students have 4-5 ACEs
- 3 students have 6+ ACEs

Moreover, 42% (13 students) are exposed to physical abuse, adult-to-adult violence, or both. Knowing the prevalence of ACEs and how they affect brain development, it's clear to see the importance of programs that prevent or address ACEs.

Agency Spotlight

Parent Trust for Washington Children: Using ACEs to Increase Effectiveness

“A majority of our clients have ACE scores 2-3 times higher than the general population,” explains Linda McDaniels, Associate Director of Parent Trust, an agency that provides parenting training and support to fragile families across Washington. Knowing the prevalence of ACEs in those they serve has transformed Parent Trust’s approach to their work. “We’ve educated our staff on how ACEs impact the brain, the potential behavioral and health outcomes of trauma, and how our clients differ from the general population. This understanding creates a more empathetic staff—a more effective staff.”

A deeper understanding of ACEs has helped Parent Trust clients as well. “Every parent we serve wants a better life for their child,” McDaniels explains. “So we teach our clients about ACEs, what they need to do to cope with them, and most important—how to keep their childrens’ ACEs to an absolute minimum.”

A Message from NWCF’s New Board President

Dear Friends,

The founders of the NW Children’s Fund intended that members’ service on the Board would help them increase their involvement and capability to work in the community. I have had that experience. When I first joined the NW Children’s Fund Board, I would never have dreamed that I would someday be Board President. I’m grateful for the opportunity and for the generosity and support of all my fellow Board members.

We are moved to fight child abuse and neglect because we believe all children deserve to be safe. The ACEs research reinforces our belief in the importance of this work. It shows that children who experience abuse and neglect are significantly more likely as a result to have problems in adulthood that are costly and painful to themselves, their relatives and their communities. We are motivated by compassion for powerless children, but we also recognize that we are working to promote the health of our community as a whole, now and in the future.

We are grateful to every one of you, our donors and supporters. Together, we are helping to make a real contribution to the health of our community – we are making hope work.

Sincerely,

Valerie Robinson
NW Children’s Fund Board President

Letter from the Executive Director

Dear Friends,

This Annual Report details the great progress we made together in the past year toward our collective goal of transforming thousands of vulnerable young lives. In the fiscal year ending July 31, 2012:

- NW Children’s Fund distributed $810,000 in 66 grants, laser-focused on improving the well-being of high-risk children and their families. Our lifetime total grants distribution is now nearly $12M!

- We expanded our outreach programs, with record attendance at our annual educational forum and events. These programs engage and inform our donors and the community, bringing a greater level of knowledge, connection and commitment regarding child welfare issues and solutions.

- 100% of individual donors’ contributions went to grants, thanks to the underwriting of all NWCF’s operating expenses by board members and sponsors. NWCF’s unflagging commitment to thoughtful stewardship of its donors’ funds is further evidenced by an impressive program expense ratio of 89.2%.

All of this was only possible because of your partnership. We hope you’ll enjoy learning about the portfolio of life-changing programs you supported this past year, described on pages 4 and 5. As we embark upon our 28th year, we look forward to continuing this vital work with you on behalf of children who need, and deserve, our help.

With deep gratitude,

Victoria Peattie Helm
Executive Director
NW Children’s Fund
