One in five children in the US have been exposed to interpersonal violence by the time they reach the age of 18. Nearly two-thirds of US children have been exposed to or experienced violence, accidents and other trauma before they reach adulthood.*

The numbers are staggering. At NW Children's Fund's spring Forum, members of the child welfare community gathered to talk about how the newest brain research on childhood trauma is shaping interventions to help victims of abuse and neglect.

Keynote Speaker Dr. Katie McLaughlin, assistant professor of child clinical psychology at the University of Washington, informed attendees that childhood abuse (trauma) influences brain development in different ways than neglect (deprivation). With trauma, children show heightened emotional reactivity and poor regulation. Exposure to deprivation influences language and executive functioning (reasoning, task flexibility, problem-solving).

The good news is that interventions – work NW Children’s Fund partners do every day – can alter these patterns. We have the ability to repair damage and promote healthy brain development following trauma and adversity. Clinicians from NWCF-funded agencies shared about three interventions that illustrate how brain research is informing their work in the field.

1 Home Visitation

Lisa “Lou” Olson, MSW, LSWAIC, said an essential component of HopeSparks’ behavioral health program is home visitation. Working with both child and caregiver, in the family’s home environment, and with a team of people to address their needs helps increase the parent-child bond, create a supportive environment and decrease the risk of neglect.

Olson uses evidence-based practices for these early interventions, guiding parents to be more responsive, attuned and present for their children. In turn, there are pivotal opportunities created for the child’s brain to develop in positive ways.

2 Trauma-Specific Assessment and Therapies

King County Sexual Assault Resource Center’s therapy approach is to treat the trauma resulting from sexual abuse, beginning with trauma-specific assessment and therapies. Larraine Lynch, LICSW, shared more about KCSARC’s use of a comprehensive assessment, followed by focused and structured recommendations for therapy.

* McLaughlin et al., 2013, Journal of the American Academy of Child & Adolescent Psychiatry

Lynch said this often involves working with both parents and child to develop skills to manage intense anxiety: progressive muscle relaxation, guided imagery and an understanding of the connection between thoughts, feelings and behaviors. As well, KCSARC employs the technique of talking about the experience and approaching the memories in a safe and graduated way, which research shows to decrease the fear response.

3 Strengthening Executive Function Skills

Childhaven’s therapeutic care centers on repairing an abused or neglected child’s brain. Nell Robinson, MS, talked about efforts at Childhaven to strengthen the executive function skills, which are typically low in children facing adversity. They work to build these skills through play, as play naturally fuels learning.

In particular, the utilization of structured, rule-based games promotes cognitive flexibility and important skills such as memory, attention and self-control. The games have the added benefit of being motivating and low anxiety for kids.

For the Future

Dr. McLaughlin was asked in the question-and-answer session to comment on what information – research that clinicians are talking about and using in their work – will be common knowledge in the future about the brain and brain development.

She mused: “If everybody could hold one piece of information in mind about their brain it’s that it is plastic, which means that it responds to experience ... Even in kids who have been exposed to the most extreme adverse experiences, the kinds of psychosocial interventions that we’ve been talking about today, and that all of you are doing in your daily work, have incredible potential to increase plasticity in the brain and to change these patterns.”

NW Children's Fund appreciates the generosity of its supporters and donors and their investment in our efforts to make positive and lasting change in children and families facing adversity. Special thanks to sponsors Thomas V. Giddens Jr. Foundation and Isola Homes.

By the Numbers: Who’s Who at the Spring Forum

On March 27, 2015, NW Children's Fund hosted 220 colleagues from the child welfare community for the inspiring Forum “Childhood Adversity and the Developing Brain: Using Neuroscience to Inform Effective Interventions.” The attendees represented a remarkable cross-section of organizations in our field.

Take a look at the chart on the left to see how the attendance numbers broke down.

We were gratified to know that attendees found the Forum helpful in their work. In fact, their survey responses highlighted the many ways in which they anticipated using what they’d gained from the event:

• Applying the information to practice; improving their services
• Integrating it into curriculum development, staff training and strategic planning
• Networking with other attendees to explore collaborations
• Sharing the Forum content with others to raise awareness

Dear Friends,

I am honored to take the helm of the NW Children's Fund Board this year to help usher us into our fourth decade of making hope work for our community's children.

We are guided by the belief that all children deserve a safe and healthy start. Connecting members of the child welfare community for NWCF's Forum is just one way we are creating opportunities through greater collaboration and innovation in the field. As a leader in the fight against child abuse and neglect, we also tap into the power of informed grantmaking to make the greatest impact possible. That means providing much-needed funding to expand important programs and services as well as ensuring that effective, established programs continue to offer life-changing help to kids in need. Your generous support enables us to do all of this critical work.

The NW Children's Fund Board voted last spring to embark on a concerted and intentional effort to expand our grantmaking and educational outreach. We have an unprecedented opportunity to take our impact to the next level. Together, we can take the next step.

Thank you for being part of our remarkable journey, past and present!

Sincerely,

Monica Fix

Dear Friends,

We are proud of what we've accomplished in 30 years.

Thanks to your unwavering support and investment, we've distributed $14 million in grants. We’ve partnered with 300 agencies in the fight against child abuse and neglect. Most importantly, we've helped thousands of children become safer, healthier and more resilient. And we are poised to do even more in the coming years.

These accomplishments were born of the dedication and generosity of NW Children's Fund supporters. It’s been a tremendous year for our organization, and we are delighted to share some highlights from this fiscal year, which ended July 31, 2015.

• NW Children's Fund invested $850,600 in grants to 66 agencies working with our community's most vulnerable children.

• Our 30th Anniversary Gala was a night to remember. More than 450 generous guests made it the most successful auction yet – and, as always, 100% of the funds raised in our record-breaking Fund-A-Need went directly to NWCF grants.

• We brought together 220 colleagues for a captivating Forum about the newest brain research on child trauma. We are honored to unite stakeholders in child welfare to learn together and engage in collaborative problem-solving.

We have the right recipe for positive change – a committed and inspired board, partnerships with heroic organizations that make lasting change every day, a powerful mission that drives everything we do, and you, our faithful and generous supporters. Thank you for believing in our work.

With deepest gratitude,

Victoria Peattie Helm
Executive Director
NW Children's Fund
