Immigration Policy and Childhood Trauma
NW Children's Fund Brings Community Together and Inspires Ripple Effect

In the wake of our nation's changing immigration policies, medical professionals have reported a spike in anxiety and distress in children from immigrant families. This is especially evident in children who worry that their parents will be deported. There are more than 4 million U.S.-citizen children living with at least one undocumented parent.

Toxic stress can harm a child's developing brain so profoundly that the effects show up decades later; it can increase the likelihood of chronic disease, mental illness and violent behavior. Studies show that as the number of adverse childhood experiences (ACEs) increases, so does the risk for negative health outcomes (see page 2 for more information).

In an opinion piece in The Seattle Times, Seattle Children's Hospital Resident Physician Michael McNeil wrote: “I am not a lawyer or politician. I cannot weigh the pros and cons of immigration's impact on our economy. What I am is a pediatrician who realizes the importance of parents in the growth and development of a child. I have seen firsthand the devastating impact our current immigration policy has on the psychological, emotional and physical well-being of my patients.”

A Community Conversation

With the goal of bringing the community together to learn and improve solutions, NW Children's Fund hosted an interactive presentation in May, Immigration Policies and Childhood Adversity, featuring Dr. McNeil and Jorge Barón, executive director of the Northwest Immigrant Rights Project. They brought to life today's reality for immigrant children and families through their personal and professional experience.

Dr. McNeil's practice has opened his eyes to the struggles of Latino youth in particular, who have high rates of poverty and exposure to domestic, community and school violence. Despite the burden of stress they are under, this population has lower utilization rates of primary care, child welfare and outpatient psychiatric services. Even though they have a right to these services, undocumented parents are afraid to seek them out.

Barón shared that there has been an increase in the number of arrests by immigration and customs enforcement nationally, and that the number of people detained with no criminal record has gone up dramatically. He also spoke of the fear for the future and high levels of anxiety in the immigrant community. He said his organization's nonprofit partners are feeling the impact of a changing nation, too, and have identified new challenges – and the accompanying trauma for children – including a decline in calls for assistance.

NWCF's event encapsulated the impact of ACEs on the immigrant community, as ACEs Can Have Lasting Effects on Behavior and Health

The groundbreaking Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACE) Study, conducted from 1995 to 1997 by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and Kaiser Permanente, found that ACEs are common across demographics:

- Almost two-thirds of study participants reported at least one of the 10 ACEs used in the survey.
- More than one in five reported three or more ACEs.

The study discovered a relationship between childhood trauma and negative health and well-being outcomes across a person’s life course, showing dramatic links between ACEs and risky behavior, psychological issues and serious illness. As the number of ACEs increases, so does the risk.

Visit www.cdc.gov/violenceprevention/acesstudy to learn more about the impact of ACEs.

well as the importance of cross-sector work in identifying vulnerable families and advocating for trauma-informed care — services based on an understanding of the triggers of trauma survivors that traditional approaches may exacerbate, so that these services can be more supportive.

Both speakers encouraged people to stand up and speak out to help protect immigrant families. Fostering an environment of support for children and their physical, cognitive and emotional development will create a better future for all.

"Immigration policy is the fundamental question about what our country is going to look like down the road, so of course it engenders a lot of passion," said Barón. "But that's also the reason that we should all be engaged in the conversation."

A Dialog with Momentum

NWCF's outreach event provided the spark for a continued exchange of ideas. For example, the American Academy of Pediatrics held an advocacy series for Immigrant Appreciation Month using Dr. McNeil’s op-ed and experience with our event as a model of how to speak out on the issue, and distributed our event slides on their Immigrant Health listserv. Dr. McNeil has participated in national webinars on the same topic, and his peers are working to bring Barón to speak to other physicians and providers.

NWCF is proud to play a part in this important work. Together with our partners, we'll continue to advocate for the safety and well-being of this vulnerable population.

Healing Abused Children

NW Children’s Fund provides grants that help child victims of abuse and neglect heal from their traumatic experiences and find permanency and stability in their lives. We prioritize programs that target long-term benefits that build resiliency in this fragile population, which serves also to prevent these survivors from growing up to become another generation of abusers themselves.

Agency Spotlight | Lutheran Community Services Northwest
NWCF proudly supports the Permanency Planning Foster-Adopt Program at Lutheran Community Services Northwest, which provides abused and neglected children with safe, secure and permanent homes.

Craig and Jane received a call from LCS Northwest asking if they would be willing to foster a little one in need for a few weeks. Their family of five welcomed young Sam into their home. Those few weeks turned into a few months, then a year and beyond. Throughout, they offered Sam love and a place to belong. He eventually became a permanent member of the family when Jane and Craig adopted him.

“LCS Northwest was with us throughout our journey,” Craig said. “Our social worker helped us navigate the bureaucratic red tape, provided much needed community referrals, fostered our relationship with the birth parent, and guided us over legal hurdles. In short, the agency rode an emotional roller coaster with us to transform the life of this child.”

Craig and Jane are adamant that it must be all about the kids when you’re a foster parent. The children, they say, need to feel secure and cherished even though their future is unknown. They need unconditional love and a place to belong – the same principles LCS Northwest brings to its work.

Working with LCS Northwest, Craig and Jane fostered four more children. Two of the children were reunited with their birth parents, and the couple adopted the other two. Today, they are the proud parents of six and their family is forever transformed.

“Some people call it chaos – we call it family,” Jane said.

Strengthening Fragile Families

NW Children's Fund provides grants to prevent child abuse and neglect for families at the greatest risk, and to support healing and stability for families impacted by domestic violence and homelessness. We prioritize programs that use integrated services to help build protective factors, redirecting at-risk children and families before they become entrenched in damaging behaviors.

Agency Spotlight | YWCA Seattle | King | Snohomish

NWCF proudly supports the YWCA's Children's Domestic Violence Program, an intensive, in-home psychoeducational curriculum for children and their non-abusive parents.

A single mother was able to take her five children and flee an abusive situation, but her 9- and 12-year-old sons, Caleb and Nathaniel*, were having behavioral issues in school that resulted in their expulsion. All five children were enrolled in the YWCA's Children's Domestic Violence Program.

This program creates a safe environment to heal from the trauma of domestic violence and re-build safety. The children were counseled and educated to explore healthy ways to express anger, enhance conflict resolution skills and engage in healthy relationships.

The boys' behavior improved noticeably, and they were welcomed back to school. By the end of the 10-week program, Caleb and Nathaniel were able to articulate their feelings to Mom and understand and make positive choices.

Helping At-Risk Youth

NW Children's Fund provides grants to ensure that kids can fulfill their potential, so they can make good life decisions and break the generational cycle of abuse. We prioritize programs that focus on instilling at-risk youth with necessary "assets" to grow into strong, responsible adults.

Agency Spotlight | Nexus Youth and Families

NWCF proudly supports Nexus Youth and Families, formerly Auburn Youth Resources, and its multi-service support for at-risk, homeless, abused and neglected youth throughout South King County.

Beth* was already struggling with mental health issues and an unstable home life when her foster parents decided their only option was to drop her off at a homeless shelter. Upon her arrival, Nexus Youth and Families set about trying to assist Beth, providing guidance and encouragement that she was not accustomed to receiving.

Despite her circumstances, Beth adapted to the new routine and began forming positive relationships with staff. Support through Nexus' case management helped her navigate getting her own health insurance and medication monitoring. Matters in her life began to take shape. With consistent support and access to mental health services, food, shelter and comfort when she needed it, she was on her way to leading a self-directed life.

This young woman spent more than two months living in Nexus' shelter before receiving news that would bring extreme joy; an acceptance letter to Cascadia College with a full-ride scholarship! Beth is now ready to strike a new path to success, one that wouldn't exist without the support of Nexus Youth and Families and its partners.

$900,700 AWARDED
Dear Friends,

Our foundation is in a very strong position as we complete our 32nd year, the second year of a five-year strategic growth plan. Thanks to your staunch support and investment in NW Children’s Fund, we have now granted a cumulative $16 million to more than 300 agencies whose work has helped transform the lives of hundreds of thousands in Western Washington.

Two years ago, after several years of careful research and planning, we set out to significantly expand our impact in the region. Our strategy is two-pronged:

1) to increase grants to high-impact organizations working directly with children and families who need and deserve our support; and

2) to engage stakeholders in child welfare from many different sectors of our community to learn, connect and work together to solve issues related to child abuse and neglect.

We are excited to share with you some of the highlights from the last fiscal year, which ended July 31, 2017:

- Participation in the 2017 NWCF Forum: The Amazing Adolescent Brain: Opportunities, Challenges and Promising Interventions was record-breaking, bringing 450 individuals together from 135 organizations. We also added a second community education event in May on the critical and timely topic of Immigration Policy and Childhood Adversity.

- NW Children’s Fund distributed more than $900K in high-impact grants to 69 outstanding agencies working with vulnerable young children and youth.

- Spark!, our 2017 Gala & Auction, was our most successful fundraiser to date. Close to 500 generous and enthusiastic guests connected with our work and helped us raise more than $700,000. And, as always, 100% of the funds raised in our record-breaking Fund-a-Need went directly to NWCF grants.

As a public foundation, each year NW Children’s Fund must raise all the funds for its grantmaking and outreach efforts from our community. Our work to create lasting change is possible only because of you – your unwavering belief that all children and families deserve to thrive. We are so grateful for your continued trust and confidence in us.

With deep appreciation,

Victoria Peattie Helm
Executive Director, NW Children’s Fund
